Additionally, the area attracts travelers coming from George Bush International Airport, which is only a few miles away from the area. The submarket contains 13.5 million square feet of retail and three power centers including West Road Plaza. The diverse population is attracted to the affordability of the area while still being centrally located. This has driven budget-friendly tenants to be more successful than their counterparts in other submarkets around Houston. The vacancy rate in the Near North Submarket has stayed below Houston's vacancy rate for the past 10 years. With the decrease in deliveries for the submarket, demand for space will drive vacancies down and rental rates up.

HOUSTON MARKET OVERVIEW

HOUSTON RETAIL OVERVIEW

Houston’s retail market remains resilient despite lingering concerns of a softening economy and a subsequent pullback in consumer spending. As of the first quarter 2024, the market’s trailing 12-month total for retail space absorbed remains among the top two major metro areas in the U.S. as its growing population continues to bolster consumer spending. Increasing demand for space has been primarily driven by discount stores, quick-service restaurants, and fitness users.

RENTAL RATES

Positive trends in leasing and absorption have driven average asking rents higher, and trailing 12-month growth stands at 3.2%, which compares to the national average of 3.1% and Houston’s long-term average of 3.0%.

INVENTORY AND CONSTRUCTION

A key driver behind Houston’s tight retail market has been a disciplined construction pipeline. The number of construction starts fell to an all-time annual low in 2023 meaning the pipeline should be much lighter in the quarters ahead, further limiting the supply and pushing rent growth to combat growing demand.

NET ABSORPTION

Aided by a slowdown in move-outs, pent-up demand and new store openings, Houston absorbed 3.3 million SF of space in the past 12 months, as of Q1 2024, most of which flowed into either the general retail or neighborhood center segments.
